

Media Release – October 11, 2019

From Apprentice to General Manager in just 20 Years

Today, national fitout, project management and high-end cabinet making business, Projects Queensland (PQ) announced the appointment of Craig Stewart as General Manager.

Twenty years ago Craig joined the company straight out of school as an apprentice Shopfitter.

On successfully completing his apprenticeship he stayed with the company gaining wide ranging experience in the fitout business.

His passion for shopfitting/ cabinet making and delivering great customer service was obvious.

Soon he was fitting out not only Gold Coast shops but high-end stores like Gucci and Louis Vuitton around the nation.

According to PQ's managing director and founder Brad Dunne, Craig's organisational and planning skills and dedication to delivering excellent service to customers is outstanding and he is ready to take on this new management role.

“Craig has gained critical hands-on experience in all areas of this business and has developed excellent relationships with our clients, our suppliers, subcontractors and our dedicated staff”, explained Brad Dunne.

Over the years Craig has held the roles of senior tradesman, foreman, project supervisor, estimator, senior project manager, chief estimator and prior to this General Management role he was Director of Projects.

Craig is married with two young children and enjoys the Gold Coast lifestyle and water sports.

“Who would have thought that I would go from an apprentice to General Manager in twenty years after leaving school.”

“In my twenty Years at PQ the Gold Coast has emerged as a regional powerhouse of economic activity and I see a great future for the region and particularly energetic young people,” observed Craig.

Arthur McKinley – Publicist – Projects Queensland – 0414 938777